CLEARED BIG SUM AT THEIR PICNIC

Catholic Congregation Held Highly Successful Affair at Round Top. Financial End of it Exceeds Expectations.

Clearing over $400, the members of St. Francis Xavier church on Wednesday held one of the most successful picnics in the history of the congregation, Round Top being visited during the day and evening by crowds numbering far into the hundreds, who not only contributed liberally but enjoyed thoroughly all the many means of entertainment provided.

It is doubtful if the picnic was ever more of a success from a social standpoint than this year, and the young people found entertainment which kept them at the hill until after eleven o'clock at night. The older ones seemed to enjoy watching the fun and the crowd lingered long before they finally made up their minds to return to town.

The extent of the work done by those in charge of the picnic may be understood to a degree when it is told that 528 meals were served during the day. More than a hundred chickens with an immense quantity of other food were required to feed the hungry picnickers and when, in the morning, the committee viewed the generous contributions toward the meals to be served it was generally agreed that much would not be used. In the evening all had been consumed, and some desiring suppers could not be accommodated.

The work of feeding this large crowd was in charge of Mrs. Pius G. Breighner, who superintended the work in the kitchen, and of Miss Emily Brinkerhoff who conducted the dining room. Both were ably assisted by a large corps of helpers. The cake stand was in care of Mrs. John Zhea, Miss Annie Wasserman and Miss Emma Hoffman and yielded a good revenue. Frank Althoff was appointed to look after the ice cream sales and he and his assistants sold thirty eight gallons. The refreshment stand was one of the busiest on the floor and John Zhea, E. P. Wisotzky, Pius G. Breighner and Frank Slonaker had their hands full caring for the people's wants.

Dancing was one of the principal forms of entertainment, the Gettysburg orchestra playing a new and varied program. The floor was well filled with dancers from the opening number of the program until "Home Sweet Home" and "Good Night Ladies" marked its close.

Nothing could mar the pleasure of the picnic crowd and when one of the trolley cars jumped the track near the Peach Orchard after eleven o'clock and went bumping over the ties for fifty or a hundred feet the crowd seemed to regard it one of the best features of the day. Three cars were running, the derailed one being, fortunately, between the other two, and all passengers were transferred around the cripple which did not get to town until about one o'clock.

The executive committee in charge of the picnic and on whom the responsibility largely rested was composed of William King, John Zhea, Ambrose Small, Mrs. Pius Breighner, and Miss Emily Brinkerhoff. Rev. W. F. Boyle, pastor of the church, was present afternoon and evening to give assistance to the committee and look after the comfort of the large crowd of people.

HOME DESTROYED IN NIGHT FIRE

Family of John Brady Flees from Burning House and they, with Some Guests, Lose All their Personal Effects. Cause Unknown.

Smoke issuing from the attic of the home of John Brady in Buchanan Valley Wednesday night, shortly after ten o'clock, awakened his daughters who discovered the entire third story of the house to be in flames.

They immediately aroused the other occupants of the house and all hurried to a place of safety while the property with all of its contents burned to the ground. William F. Noel, an officer of the Philadelphia police force, who is a nephew of Mr. Brady, together with his sister, Anna Noel, and his aunt, Miss Mary Agnew, had arrived at the Brady home on Tuesday to spend a two weeks vacation. They, as well as the Brady family, lost all of their personal effects including what money the ladies of the party had brought with them.

By the time Alice and Grace Brady had aroused the family the flames had gained such headway that it was necessary for them to leave the building at once, and attired only in their night clothing, were compelled to make what effort they could to prevent the other buildings from igniting.

Some of the first neighbors to arrive were Hon. James Cole and his wife who were on their way home from a visit to friends in the vicinity. Other people soon came and with their assistance the stable and nearby out-buildings were saved. Practically nothing that the house contained was saved from the flames and friends of the family loaned them clothes until they could reach town to-day and secure other apparel.

Everyone is at a loss to account for the cause of the fire. Although the pipe from the kitchen stove carried the smoke through the top story of the house there had been no fire in the stove since five o'clock in the evening. The family had retired shortly before ten o'clock and up to that time had noticed no stranger about the place; nor had anyone of the occupants of the house been above the second floor during the evening.

The house was insured but the policy was destroyed in the fire and Mr. Brady does not recall the amount.

HAS RESIGNED

Increase Pastor's Salary when he Announces Resignation.

Rev. M. P. Hocker, D. D., pastor of St. John's Lutheran church of Steelton, and a graduate of the local institutions, terminated a pastorate of thirty two years by resigning Sunday morning, to take effect September 1. The resignation was a great surprise to the congregation and they immediately held a meeting and offered an increase of salary to Dr. Hocker to induce him to remain in his first and only charge. He was recently offered the superintendency of the Emma Orphans' Home at Middletown and his resignation was to take charge of that institution. Dr. Hocker has a large number of friends in Gettysburg.

IMPROVEMENTS AT NEW POST OFFICE

Plan to Paint Interior Walls at the New Federal Building. Contract for Screens Let to St. Louis Firm. For Better Lawn.

Further plans for the beautifying of the property at the new Federal Building are now under consideration at the office of the Supervising Architect, in the Treasury Department, and it likely that the interior of the building will be much improved.

Recently, Postmaster Duncan, who is also custodian of the building, received a letter in which he was asked regarding the screening and painting of the interior. He urged the immediate screening and his suggestion was adopted and bids advertised for. This morning he received notice that the contract for the work had been awarded to the McRee Green Manufacturing Company, of St. Louis, Missouri. Their bid was $548.70 and the work is to be completed within ninety days.

Mr. Duncan, as custodian, advised the supervising architect that he would not recommend the immediate painting of the interior of the building because of the proposed change of some of the marble in the lobby, a process which will require time and likely cause a great deal of dust and dirt. His suggestion for postponement of this work was also adopted. Many persons prefer the plain white walls finished as they now are, while others say the painting, as done in other federal buildings, improves greatly the appearance.

While these interior changes are in prospect, the exterior will not be neglected. Because of the fact that the Government has not yet formally accepted the building from the contractors, and the sheds and tools of the contracting firm are still on the ground, it has not been possible, up to the present time, to make the necessary measurements for the complete sodding of the terraces front and back. Grass seed will be sown during the fall and, if this does not produce a good stand, the surroundings will likely be put in first grade sod early in the spring.

BADLY CUT WHEN JAR EXPLODED

Fermenting Fruit Bursts Jar, and Glass Severs Artery for Oxford Township Woman. Family Arrest Flow of Blood. Other Accidents.

When a fruit jar exploded in her hands Miss Catherine Brady, of Oxford township, had a large artery in the wrist severed, the wound bleeding so profusely that it was with difficulty the flow of blood was checked until a physician could be secured.

Miss Brady was carrying several jars from one room in the house to another when the contents of one, which had evidently fermented, burst the containing glass and scattered in every direction. A large piece of glass cut with a jagged edge deep into the flesh and blood spured from the wound. Other members of the family rushed to the young lady's side and tied tight bandages above the wrist which in a measure arrested the flow of blood. When a physician arrived it was permanently stopped.

Miss Brady is a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. A. F. Brady residing on the old Lilly mill site in Oxford township. Though somewhat weakened by the loss of blood, she suffers little from her unusual experience.

Hand Cut Through

Reynolds Weaver, residing on the William H. Kohler farm, in Oxford township, met with a serious mishap, in which one of his hands was painfully hurt. Mr. Weaver was placing a mower in a shed, and as he attempted to catch the cutting bar, which had been placed in an upright position and was falling, one of the pointed guards struck and penetrated entirely through one of his hands.

Auto Cranking Dangerous. Reuben Wertz, of Biglerville, while in the act of cranking his automobile, had his right arm broken at the wrist, and at the same time dislocated the wrist joint, on Thursday morning. Mr. Wertz was on his way to the home of his cousin, William Dicks, near Hampton, whose barn was recently destroyed by fire, and when near Hunterstown, stopped his engine to allow a frightened horse to get by. When he again started it the accident occurred.

GERMANS TO BESIEGE NAMUR TO FACE ALLIES

Hurl 400,000 Men Toward France.

LIEGE IS INVESTED

Heavy Fighting Continues For Possession of Forts.

OPPOSING ARMIES CLOSE

Several General Engagements Expected Soon.

London, Aug. 13.—A great force of Germans is investing Namur, a strong fortified city of Belgium, about thirty-five miles to the southwest of Liege.

A report from Brussels puts the number of men in this force at 80,000 but a Central News dispatch to London states that the army advancing on Namur numbers between 400,000 and 600,000 men.

This movement is believed to have developed the main campaign plan of the Germans in Belgium. While large bodies are reported to have moved north and west of Liege, threatening Brussels and southwest, coming in contact with the French at Givet, in the French department of Ardennes, the main body of the army of the Meuse, it is believed, is being hurled around Liege upon the allies, near Namur.

The forts around Liege, still said in Brussels to be intact, are still besieged. In a similar manner, it is expected Namur will be laid under siege, while the Germans push their main body toward the frontier. This is bound, it is believed, to force a battle of prime importance on Belgian soil within a few days.

Allies Preparing For Battle.

The allies are reported to be concentrated and to have prepared all their plans for battle, but their positions, their numbers and their plans for meeting the Germans have been carefully masked. Only the opening of a general engagement may reveal them.

A member of the Belgian general staff in London expressed the belief that a big battle was now in progress near Liege.

The advance of the Germans to the north and west of Liege, is led by a cavalry force of 10,000, with machine guns and they are followed by infantry, apparently in great force.

Fighting is reported as occurring at Tirlemont, on the way from Liege to Brussels, and from Maestricht, the Netherlands, came reports of a terrific artillery battle around Tongres, north of Liege.

One report from Brussels indicated that one or more of the Liege forts had been reduced by the Germans, but officially it is asserted in the Belgian capital that all are holding out. The Germans are reported to be bringing up heavy siege guns. A few hours bombardment from them will blow the forts out of existence.

The fight for the possession of the Liege forts continues. The Germans erected a bridge at Lixhe for the transport of troops and heavy material, and it is possible that simultaneously an attempt will be made to cross the river Meuse in front of Liege, for convoys have been sighted proceeding toward Engis.

The German cavalry, which Monday and Tuesday spread itself out over a front extending from St. Trond to Hannut, have fallen back, except a one point, where they are keeping in contact with the Belgians. A fight of importance occurred near Tirlemont where a thousand German cavalry with quick firing guns mounted on horses attacked a regiment of Belgian lancers. The latter retired, owing to inferiority numerically. The Belgians lost two officers and a small number of men in killed and wounded.

A regiment of dragoons coming from the direction of Liege, which attempted to surprise the Belgians at Alenif, in the province of Liege, was driven off, leaving 153 dead and 102 prisoners. Uhlans have taken more than $400,000 from the bank at Hasselt, capital of the province of Limburg.

It is declared that the German crown prince is not with the troops in Belgium as has been reported.

French and German forces are in contact for sixty-five miles along the Franco-German frontier, and many sharp engagements are reported.

Sharp Fighting In France.

The lines of the opposing forces are stretched along a front of 100 miles or more. Both French and German war officers assert their forces have been successful. The one thing that seems certain in the conflict reports and in the official reticence of the various warring governments is that the Germans are developing their main movement against France. This, according to many experts, is the advance through Metz and through the grand duchy of Luxembourg. Sharp fighting is reported in that direction and a battle of some magnitude may soon be fought.

Such messages as have come through from Berlin show that in the Kaiser's capital satisfaction is felt with regard to the army's movements. It is declared there that the French had 55,000 men at Muelhausen and that they were driven from the town and completely defeated.

Further news of German victory comes by way of Rome, where a dispatch quoted General Von Stein, of the German general staff, as declaring that a Belgian force which had attacked the Germans around Liege, had been nearly annihilated. Only a small German force was engaged at Liege, according to Von Stein, so as to mask the movements of the main army. This version admits that the Liege forts were still intact.

Paris Reports Victories.

According to the war office in Paris the French have been victorious in every engagement. German invaders on the departments of Meuse and Muerthe-et-Moselle all were driven back, according to the French version.

At Mangiennes, northeast of Verdun, where the main German attack seems to be developing, Paris reports that the Germans attacked the French on Monday evening. The French, reinforced by reserves, then took the offensive and repulsed the Germans with considerable losses. A German battery was destroyed by the French artillery fire, and another was captured, with three Gatling guns and ammunition.

Near Moncel, according to the Paris war office, a German battalion with artillery was repulsed. The German losses are said to have been heavy. The village of Lagarde, in German territory, was taken by the French at the point of the bayonet.

The Fourteenth Austrian army corps of 30,000 men, commanded by the Grand Duke of Tuscany, is reported to have entered Alsace from the Swiss frontier and soon will be in position to aid the German operations against France to the south.

In the fighting, mostly of outpost detachments, along a sixty-five-mile line from Chambley and Messire, the French see an effort at a German flanking movement. This may determine the scene of an important battle.

Germans attacked the French outposts at Chateau Selins, eighteen miles from Nancy. Again the French version is that the invaders were repulsed.

The French also report the capture of Lagarde, on the Marne canal, in Lorraine. This is the first town in this "lost province" to fall into the hands of the French.

Cossacks Defeat Austrians.

A dispatch to Rome from Trieste says two entire brigades of Austrian cavalry were destroyed by a overwhelming force of Cossacks and artillery after invading Russia near Tietgeral.

Austria has granted Italy's demand for reparation for the destruction of the Puglia company's buildings in the bombardment of Antivari, Montenegro. This is expected to lessen the tension between Italy and the Austro-German allies and may pave the way for Italy to maintain her neutrality in the war.

One salient point emerging from the latest news of the war is what is described in London as "the silent victory." This applies to the fact that the North Sea, over which almost absolute silence has brooded so long, is now open to shipping without serious danger. The steamship services from Denmark to London and from New Castle to Norway are resuming, while the steamship services between the Hook of Holland and Harwich have suffered no interruption.

These facts, in the opinion of London authorities, imply that the German fleet, for the time being at least, is safely held in check.

German Cruisers Safe.

In regard to naval movements there is little news except a report that the elusive German cruisers Goeben and Breslau have reached the Dardanelles, where, in accordance with international law, they will be dismantled and interned until the war is ended. Should this news be confirmed it will be a great step toward the safety of British and French shipping in the Mediterranean.

In the political sphere are two interesting items. According to the Cologne Gazette, Rumania has joined the Triple Alliance and will invade Serbia. It is reported from Settinge that the Serbian and Montenegrin arm have effected a junction at Plevlje (Tashlija), 157 miles from Novibazar.

The London Times says Japan is acting on her own initiative and hopes she will limit her action to Kiaochow, as "seizures of German territory elsewhere in the Pacific might lead to grave misunderstandings among our kinsmen."

Paris reports Montenegrin troops occupying Tarabosch, overlooking Scutari, Albania, where severe fighting between Montenegrins and Turks occurred in the Balkan war.

A dispatch from Rome states that the Montenegrins have captured Scutari.

HARVESTER TRUST MUST DISSOLVE

U. S. Court Declares Company a Monopoly.

ACTIONS ARE CRITICISED

Get Ninety Days to Dissolve Company or the Court Will Appoint a Receiver.

St. Paul, Aug. 13.—The International Harvester company was declared to be a monopoly in restraint of interstate and foreign trade and was ordered dissolved by a majority decision filed here by Judges Smith and Hook in the United States court. Judge Sanborn dissented.

Unless the $140,000,000 corporation submits a plan for the dissolution of the combination into at least three independent concerns within ninety days of the issuance of an appeal mandate from the United States supreme court, the decision announces that the court will entertain an application for the appointment of a receiver for all the properties of the corporation.

The majority opinion held that the International Harvester company was from its organization in 1902 in violation of the Sherman law. The original corporation, formed of five concerns violated the first section of the Sherman act by restraining competition among themselves. The combined organization also tended to monopolize trade in contravention of the second section of this law.

The decision declares that while the International Harvester company and its selling organization, the International Harvester Company of America, control from 80 to 85 per cent of the trade in agricultural implements manufactured by them, their treatment of smaller competitors in general has been fair and just.

The court finds fault with the actions of the corporation, aside from the technical violation of the Sherman law, for only two actions. The opinion declares there was no excuse for the advertising of the products of D. M. Osborne & Co. as independent for two years after it had virtually entered the International Harvester company.

The other act censured by the decision was the manner in which the five original concerns were turned over to the International Harvester company by William C. Lane, a New York banker, who contended that he had purchased the properties.

"The court is clearly of the opinion," the decision reads, "that the process by which it was made to appear that the properties were sold to Lane was merely colorable."

FOOD PRICE SQUEEZE DENOUNCED IN HOUSE

Congress Asked to Probe Alleged Conspiracy.

Washington, Aug. 13.—The house of representatives is to investigate the advance in the price of food stuffs and determine to what extent a "squeeze" is being attempted by dealers in this country who are anxious to take advantage of the European war.

Representative Howard, of Georgia introduced a resolution calling upon the department of justice to ascertain whether there is a conspiracy among dealers and to advise what steps are being taken to prosecute those responsible.

Representative Kahn, of California announced that he would introduce a bill making it a penal offense for two persons, firms or corporations to join in an agreement to advance the prices of food stuffs.

The Howard resolution calls upon the department of agriculture to advise the house as to the maximum prices of food stuffs now being charged throughout the United States and to furnish figures for the export food stuffs for the month preceding the European war, and the time covered since the beginning of that war. The preamble recites that dealers have raised food prices on the pretext that the European war is responsible and that such statements have no foundation in fact.

Meat Prices Forced Down.

Chicago, Aug. 13.—It was admitted at the stock yards that the agitation against high prices had considerable to do with a fall of 40 to 50 cents hundred weight in the price of hogs as compared with quotations twenty four hours before. In some extreme cases the drop since Monday has been as much as a dollar.

Threats of a general boycott against all kinds of pork had the effect of lessening the demand from butchers. At the same time the receipts of hogs were greatly enlarged. The arrivals in Chicago on Wednesday alone amounted to 40,000 head, as against 60,000 during the whole of last week.

War Hits Exposition.

Rome, Aug. 13.—Italy has canceled her participation in the Panama-Pacific Exposition at San Francisco in 1915 because of the gravity of the war situation.

Killed Praying For Army.

Brussels, Aug. 13.—Fifteen women were killed during a fire panic in a church at La Louviere while a mass was being said for the Belgian army. Fifty others, mostly women and girls, were injured. The panic was caused by the overturning of a candle. Nearly all of the worshippers were women and girls, as the men are fighting in the army.

Pope Grieved by War.

Rome, Aug. 13.—Deeply grieved that the general European war should have come during his pontificate, Pope Pius has cancelled virtually all engagements. His holiness spends hours alone in prayer. Grave fears are entertained that worry and sorrow, to which the pontiff has all but given way, may undermine his health.

Stage Money.

It has been observed that stage money must sometimes figure in the salaries that stage performers receive. In a breach of promise case, recently tried at New York, it was shown that an actress, who was understood to be receiving $1,000 a week, was actually getting $300, out of which $80 was deducted for booking and press agent fees. Still, as the press agent was giving her a salary of $1,000, she could hardly have begrudged the money she paid him.—Springfield Republican.

BELGIUM AND LUXEMBURG

Two States Figuring In Europe's War.

BOTH ARE FIGHTING FIELDS.

In Times Past Generals Chose Them as Battlegrounds—Napoleon Met Wellington's Great Army in Belgium. Facts About These Monarchies of Interest to the General Public—The Little Duchy, a Highway For Troops, Is Ruled by the Grand Duchess Marie Adelaide and Is Supposedly Neutral Territory.

BELGIUM and Luxembourg are two localities of strategic importance in the present European disturbances. Both border on countries immediately concerned and are pieced to be neutral, but Germany invaded Luxembourg at the outset of hostilities, and the Kaiser's officials of state notified Belgium that she could expect like treatment.

It was this militant announcement that caused Great Britain to plan to plunge into the war and to ask parliament for a war fund of $525,000,000.

Belgium has been a storm center in many European wars, in few of which she was an active factor. Her plains and valleys have been chosen against her will by European generals as grounds on which to decide their quarrels by force of arms. The whole world knows it was in Belgium, at Waterloo, that Napoleon and Wellington clashed in their momentous death grapple, resulting in the shattering of the Corsican's dream.

Facts About Belgium.

Belgium, a kingdom, has a total area of 11,373 square miles and a population (at the census of 1910) of 7,510,730.

There are nine provinces—Antwerp, Brabant, Flanders (E. and W.), Liege, Hainaut, Limburg, Luxembourg and Namur. Brussels (with suburbs, 655,806 inhabitants) is the capital.

Other towns with over 100,000 inhabitants are Antwerp, the chief port (320,640, exclusive of suburbs); Ghent (165,149) and Liege (174,798).

Its great harbor and commercial entrepot is Antwerp, a strongly fortified city at the mouth of the Scheldt. The other harbors are Ostend, Nieuport, Blankenberg and Zeebrugge.

French and Flemish are the joint official languages, but while French is the language of the upper classes Flemish is spoken by the majority, preponderating in Flanders, Limburg and Brabant, including Antwerp. Nearly all the inhabitants are at least nominally Roman Catholics.

Belgian Government.

The Belgian constitution of 1831 jointly vests the legislative power in the king, the senate and the chamber of representatives. The 110 senators (with the exception of twenty-seven elected by the provincial councils) and 196 representatives are elected by the people, the former for eight, the latter for four years. Universal male suffrage, with plural voting up to three votes by property and educational qualifications, was introduced by the electoral law of 1894, proportional representation being secured by an act of 1900.

The united constituencies numbered 1,097,619 voters, with 2,710,851 votes

The "polders" near the coast, which are protected by dikes against floods, cover an area of 193 square miles. The highest hill, Banque Michel, rises to a height of 2,230 feet, but the mean elevation of the whole country does not exceed 536 feet.

The principal rivers are the Scheldt (Escaut) and the Meuse (Meuse). Brussels has a mean temperature of 50 degrees F. (summer, 63 degrees; winter, 37 degrees).

Antwerp is the principal fortress, and Liege and Namur are also fortified, forming "tetes-de-pont" on the line of the Meuse, which was planned as a defense against the violation of neutrality by either France or Germany. Belgium has no navy.

The army numbers 250,000 men and was ordered mobilized by Albert, king of the Belgians, when Germany invaded Belgium.

Commerce.

Belgium is essentially a manufacturing country, and it is largely dependent upon foreign supplies for its food.

The mineral kingdom yields coal (1909, 23,517,550 tons), iron (1909, 205,980 tons), zinc, lead and copper.

The leading industries are collieries, quarries and metallurgy (Mons, Charleroi, Liege, Namur, Hainaut and Brabant), glass textiles (Verviers), lace (Brussels, Mechlin, Bruges, etc.), flour and starch mills, sugar, distilleries, breweries, etc.

Luxembourg in Detail.

The grand duchy of Luxembourg, small though it is, has witnessed many exciting times. Its recent seizure by the Germans as a gateway to French territory was not the first time when armed outsiders dominated its fair domains. Luxembourg is one of the beauty spots of eastern Europe.

In the great continental wars of the past the martial tread of armies has frequently resounded in the hills and dales of the little duchy, and in the Napoleonic wars the French commander frequently used it as a thoroughfare northwestward into Prussia.

The ruler of Luxembourg is the Grand Duchess Marie Adelaide, who succeeded to the title Feb. 23, 1912.

The minister of state is M. Eyschen.

GERMANS MUST OCCUPY LIEGE

Belgian City Vital Point In Their Plan of Campaign.

KEY TO ATTACK ON FRANCE

Three Great Teuton Armies Put In Motion Against Enemy In First Hours of War—Balked by Unexpected Resistance of Belgians to Invasion of Their Territory.

To understand the fighting which marked the beginning of the great Franco-German conflict it is necessary to grasp clearly just one simple geographical fact.

From the Rhine, which is the base of German operations, three routes lead west and south into France. The first starts at Cologne, crosses the Belgian frontier just beyond Aix-la-Chapelle, reaches the Meuse at Liege and ascends the Meuse to enter France between Maubeuge and Givet by a natural gap in the divide between the headwaters of the Oise and the Sambre. This is the route followed by the main railroad between Paris and Berlin.

The second natural avenue to France starts at Coblenz and ascends the valley of the Moselle until it arrives at Luxembourg. It then crosses into France by Longwy and the gap of Stenay.

The third approach follows the Rhine valley from Mayence to Strassburg, and then turns west through the famous Saverne gap to cross the frontier of France near Luneville and Nancy and directly in the center of the open space left in the French forts between Epinal and Toul.

Three Great German Armies.

Conforming to the geographical conditions, the Germans are directing at France three great armies—the Army of the Meuse, based on Cologne; the Army of the Moselle, based on Coblenz, and the Army of the Rhine, based on Mayence and on Strassburg. The first would naturally become visible when it touched Belgian territory; the second when Luxembourg was invaded; the third, would remain masked behind the fortifications of Metz and Strassburg. The first two would arrive in France behind the Belfort-Verdun barrier of forts and presumably compel the French army on this line to fall back, opening the way for the Army of the Rhine and permitting the concentration of all three German armies well within French territory and north of Paris, the German objective.

A German advance guard walked into Luxembourg and occupied the principality. This was plainly only a flying expedition made up of garrisons of frontier posts. Having occupied Luxembourg, they began to skulk in front of Longwy, and this fighting continued growing sifter as the mass of the Army of the Moselle came up.

In the same fashion they also began on the same day skulking on the border facing Strassburg. They were seized, raiding parties crossed the boundary, and a dirigible dropped bombs in Luneville, the first considerable town on the line of the approach of the Army of the Rhine.

Belgians Opposed the Advance.

The Army of the Meuse had assigned to it the most difficult preliminary role. Between Cologne, its base, and the frontier is a distance of twenty-five miles. Its advance was preceded by a demand to be permitted to cross, made by the Kaiser upon the Belgian government.

The permission being denied and Belgian resistance assured the invading force deployed rapidly until it spread out over an area of some thirty miles, its right flank resting upon the Dutch frontier at Vise, its left upon Spa and Stavelot and its bulk on the line of the railway from Liege to Cologne, which, going south, descends the Vesdre river to its junction with the Meuse at Liege.

Three possibilities had to be considered by the German commander of the Army of the Meuse. The Belgians might make no resistance. They might content themselves with a formal and insignificant resistance or they might, in attempting to make a real resistance, fail utterly because their mobilization was incomplete. In any case his necessity was to push on at top speed and endeavor to lay hands upon Liege, a strongly fortified town, before it was prepared and at the same time endeavor to isolate it by an enveloping movement, which necessitated crossing the Meuse at Vise.

Could the Germans lay hold of Liege all Belgium to the sea would be open to them. As they were anxious not to fight in Belgium, but to get across Belgium to France as quickly as possible, it would have been necessary to leave only a little garrison in the forts of Liege, thus protecting their flank, and press on up the Meuse valley to the open French frontier.

So valuable in the scheme of German operations was Liege that the sacrifice of some thousands of men to capture it was held worth while. This explains the apparent recklessness of the opening attacks and the slaughter which Belgian dispatches declare accompanied their repulse.

An unexpectedly heroic Belgian resistance has temporarily delayed the advance of the Army of the Meuse.

The KITCHEN CUPBOARD

SOFT SHELL CRABS.

LUNCH.
Creamed Crab Meat.
Buttered Toast.
Fresh Fruit.
Cocoa or Tea.

DURING the summer, when crabs shed their shells and the so called soft shelled crabs are to be had, this shellfish is very popular. The soft shelled crab is only the ordinary crab taken after it has shed its old shell and before the new shell has had time to grow.

With Tartare Sauce.

Crab Croquette.—Take a pint of boiled crab meat. Add to it a tablespoonful of chopped parsley, a dash of salt, pepper and grated nutmeg. Heat a cupful of milk and add one tablespoonful of butter rubbed into two table-spoonfuls of flour. Cook until smooth. Add the beaten yolks of two eggs and stir for a minute. Take from the fire and stir in the crab meat and set away to cool. When perfectly cold shape in rakes or balls. Roll in cracker crumbs then brush with egg, dip again in the cracker crumbs and plunge into deep-boiling fat and fry a deep golden brown. Serve with sauce tartare—that is, mayonnaise to which have been added chopped pickled cucumbers.

Daintily Broiled.

Broiled Soft Shell Crabs.—Choose large fine crabs, dip in melted butter and season lightly with salt and pepper. Arrange on a gridiron and broil until they are a delicate brown. Turn them from side to side every few minutes. Arrange on rounds of toast and pour over them hot melted butter flavored with a little lemon juice and chopped parsley.

Creamed Crab Meat.—Take one pint of crab meat, one tablespoonful of melted butter, one level teaspoonful of flour, one small after dinner coffee cupful of cream and salt, celery, salt and pepper to season, and slices of toast for serving. Mix the flour and cream, then add the other ingredients. Put the mixture in a saucepan and let simmer on the back of the stove until thick enough to spread on toast. Pour over the slices of toast and serve.

Fish and Vegetable.

Crab and Tomato Sandwich.—Toast bread on the outside and fill with a large slice of ripe tomato browned in butter or broiled nicely and either buttered crab meat or a soft shell crab flattened in a double broiler and broiled over hot coals, basting with butter. Serve this sandwich hot or cold.

In restaurants where this is a specialty the crabs are first cooked in a creole—really smothered by steam over a mixture of condiments so that the natural moisture and delicacy of flavor are preserved with the added piquancy from the condiments.

Last Rose of Summer in Millinery

THE head of the summer could not be more fully expressed in any apparel than it is in these two exquisite hats. Full-blown roses, of the large garden variety, are used on both of them. The first hat, rather small, shows a marvelously clever and original combination of the simplest of millinery materials. It is made of black-silk braid and blue satin ribbon over the lightest of frames. There is a finish of horsehair braid forming a ruffe about the brim edge. The materials are put on the frame in the simplest possible manner, a row of braid alternating with a band of ribbon. The edge is bound with a narrow fold of velvet to which the ruffe is sewed. There is a facing of thin satin in back.

One large full-blown rose is mounted at the back and a sister rose sets close to the left side near the edge of the brim. The model is finished by setting small green buds and little sprays of foliage about the crown and brim. The charm in this model lies

REMOVE OBJECTION

Commissioner Bigelow Takes Step to Benefit Farmers.

State Highway Commissioner Bigelow has ordered the automobile registration division to accept all applications for the registration of traction engines or trailers when received on a form of application to which no copy of the rules and regulations is attached. This plan has been approved by traction engine owners throughout the State, who have requested that the present form of application, incorporating rules and regulations regarding the operation of traction engines, be discontinued.

This order removes all chance of further misunderstanding and objection to the automobile act of July 7, 1913. New form blanks have been printed and can be secured upon application to the State Highway Department.

As to Beauty.

Socrates called beauty a short-lived tyranny; Plato, a privilege of nature; Theophrastus, a silent cheat; Theocritus, a delightful prejudice; Carneades, a solitary kingdom; Domitian said that nothing was more grateful; Aristotle affirmed that beauty was better than all the letters of recommendation in the world; Homer, that 'twas a glorious gift of nature; and Ovid, alluding to him, calls it a favor bestowed by the gods.

WAR MAP OF CENTRAL EUROPE SHOWING LOCATION OF BELGIUM AND LUXEMBURG.

In 1910-11. There are in addition representative provincial and communal councils, elected on a somewhat more liberal franchise.

Belgium has a frontier of 831 miles and is bounded on the north and east by the Netherlands (268 miles), on the south and west by France (381 miles), on the east by Germany (sixty miles), and the grand duchy of Luxembourg (eighty miles), with a seaboard of forty two miles.

The Meuse and its tributary, the Sambre, divide it into two distinct regions, that in the west being generally level and fertile, while the table land of the Ardennes, in the east, has for the most part a poor soil.

She Was Right at That.

"Who can tell me what a cape is?" queried the teacher of the junior class in geography. "A cape," replied a bright little miss, "is a coat that hasn't any sleeves."

Wearing Sunday Clothes.

"Some men," said Uncle Eben, "don't wear del Sunday clothes often enough to keep fum lookin' funny when dey gets dressed up."

The Adventures of Kathlyn

By HAROLD MAC GRATH

Illustrated by Pictures from the Moving Picture Production of the Selig Polyscope Co.

SYNOPSIS

CHAPTER I—Kathlyn Hare, believing her father, Col. Hare, in peril, has summoned her, leaves her home in California to go to him in Allahabad, India. Umballa, pretender to the throne, has imprisoned the colonel, named by the late king as his heir.

CHAPTER II—Arriving in Allahabad, Kathlyn is informed by Umballa that her father being dead she is to be queen, and must marry him. She refuses and is informed by the priests that no woman can rule unmarried. She is given seven days to think it over.

CHAPTER III—She still refuses and is told that she must undergo two ordeals with wild beasts. If she survives she will be permitted to rule.

CHAPTER IV—John Bruce, an American, saves her life.

CHAPTER V—The elephant which carries her from the scene of her trials runs away, separating her from Bruce and the rest of the party.

CHAPTER VI—She takes refuge in a ruined temple, but the haven in Allahabad is a lion and she is forced to flee from it.

CHAPTER VII—She finds a retreat in the jungle, only to fall into the hands of a snake.

CHAPTER VIII—Kathlyn is brought to the public mall in Allahabad and sold to Umballa, who, adding her still inauspicious, throws her into the dungeon with her father.

CHAPTER IX—She is rescued by Bruce and his friends.

CHAPTER X—Colonel Hare also is rescued. Umballa, with soldiers, starts in pursuit. Kathlyn is struck by a bullet.

When he had recovered sufficiently, he gave orders to one of the soldiers to return to the city to bring back at once servants, elephants and all that would be required for a long pursuit. The messenger was also to make known these preparations to the Council, who would undertake to forward the cable submitted to them.

Quite unknown, quite unsuspected by him, for all the activity of his spies, a volcano was beginning to grumble under his feet. All tyrants, the petty and the great, have heard it: the muttering of the oppressed.

Perhaps the fugitives had gone 30 miles when suddenly the jungle ended abruptly and a desert opened up before them. Beyond stood a purple line of jagged hills. Ramabai raised his hand, and the elephants came to a halt.

"I believe I know where I am," said Ramabai. "Somewhere between us and yonder hills is a walled city, belonging to Bala Khan, a Pathan who sometimes styles himself a rajah. He has a body of fierce fighting men; and he lives unmolested for two reasons: looting would not be worth while, and his position is isolated and almost impregnable. Now, if I am right, we shall find shelter there, for he was an old friend of my father's, and I might call him a friend of mine, since I fell asleep for him occasionally."

"Bala Khan?" mused Bruce, reminiscently. "Isn't he the chap who has a sacred white elephant?"

"It is the same," answered Ramabai. "We can reach there before sundown. It would be wise to hasten, however, as this desert and those hills are infested with lawless, nomadic bands of masterless men—brigands, you call them."

On through the narrow streets, sometimes the sides of the elephants scraping against the mud and plaster of the buildings, and one could easily look into the second stories. No one seemed hostile; only a natural curiosity was evinced by those standing in doorways or leaning out of windows.

The house of Bala Khan was not exactly a palace, but it was of respectable size. A high wall surrounded the compound. There was a gateway, open at this moment. A servant ran out and loudly demanded what was wanted.

"Say to your master, Bala Khan, that Ramabai, son of Maah Singh, his old friend, awaits with friendly greetings."

"Kit," whispered Kathlyn's father, "this chap Ramabai wouldn't make a bad king. And look!" excitedly. "There's the sacred elephant, and if he isn't white I'll eat my hat!"

The servant ran back into the compound and spoke to a dignified man, who proved to be a high caste Brahmin, having in his charge the care of the white elephant. He disappeared and returned soon with the elephant. The pleasant face, though proudly molded, together with the simplicity of his appearance, conveyed to Kathlyn the fact that here was a man to be trusted, at least for the present. He greeted Ramabai cordially, struck his hands and ordered out the servants to take charge of what luggage there was and to lead away the elephants to be fed and watered.

Courteously he asked Kathlyn how she had become injured, and Ramabai acted as interpreter. He then ushered them into his house, spread rugs and cushions for them to sit upon, and mildly inquired what had brought the son of his old friend so far.

Colonel Hare spoke several dialects fluently, and briefly told (between sips of tea and bites of cake which had been set out for the guests) his experiences in Allahabad.

"The rulers of Allahabad," observed Bala Khan, "have always been half mad."

"By the way, colonel, is there a pair of binoculars in the howdah?"

Umballa in Pursuit.

They would cut the throat of a man for the sake of his clothes.

"Let us go on," said the colonel. "I don't care where. I am dead for want of food and sleep."

"And I, too," confessed Kathlyn. "My arm pains me badly."

"Yes. Do you want them?"

"No. Just to be sure they were there. We may have occasion to use them later, in case this place Ramabai is taking us to should turn out hostile. I like to know what is going on ahead of me."

"A white elephant," mused the colonel. "Do you know it for a fact that this Bala Khan has a white elephant?" he called across to Ramabai.

"I have never seen it, sahib. It is what they say."

"A pair of mottled ears is the nearest I ever came to seeing a white elephant, and I've hunted them for 30 years, here, in Ceylon, in Burma, in Africa. There was once a tiger near Madras that hadn't any stripes. The natives would not permit him to be killed because they held that, being unique, he was sacred. A sacred white elephant! Poor simple minded fools!"

The colonel felt in his pockets, then dropped his hands dispiritedly. How long since he had tasted tobacco?

"Bruce, have you got a cheroot in your pocket? I think a smoke would brace me up."

Bruce laughed and passed up a broken cigar, which the colonel lit carefully. The weariness seemed to go out of his face magically.

"This Bala Khan should be Mohammedan," said Bruce. "The Pathan despises the Hindu."

"There are Hindus in yonder city, quite as many," said Ramabai, "as there are Mohammedans. Even the Pathan respects that which he cannot understand."

"Isn't that the wall behind that sand hill? Let me have the glasses a moment, colonel. . . . H'm! The walled city, all right. Some people moving about outside. Dancers, I should say."

"Professional," explained Ramabai. "Nothing religious, then? By George!"

"Take a look. There's an elephant being led into the city gates."

The colonel peered eagerly through the glasses. "The sun is shining on him. . . . Not he! . . . white! A white elephant! I'd give ten thousand this minute to own it. There, he's entered the gate. Well, well! And I've lived to see it! Poor old Barnum, to have carried around a tined pachyderm! He's white as any elephant flesh could be. Those dancing chaps are going in, too. What caste would those dancers be, Ramabai?"

"Pariahs, quite possibly; probably brigands."

The rim of the sun was sinking rapidly as Bruce drew his elephant to a halt before the gate of the white walled city. The guard ran out, baring the way.

"I am Ramabai, a friend of Bala Khan. I am come to pay him a visit. Direct me to his house or his palace."

The authority in Ramabai's voice was sufficient for the guard, who gave the necessary directions. The party continued on into town.

Presently they came upon a group in the center of which were the dancers at their vocation. They ceased their mad whirling at the sight of the two elephants. There were nine of these men, fierce of eye and built muscularly. No effeminate Hindus here, mused Bruce, who did not like the looks of them at all.

On through the narrow streets, sometimes the sides of the elephants scraping against the mud and plaster of the buildings, and one could easily look into the second stories. No one seemed hostile; only a natural curiosity was evinced by those standing in doorways or leaning out of windows.

The house of Bala Khan was not exactly a palace, but it was of respectable size. A high wall surrounded the compound. There was a gateway, open at this moment. A servant ran out and loudly demanded what was wanted.

He greeted Ramabai cordially, struck his hands and ordered out the servants to take charge of what luggage there was and to lead away the elephants to be fed and watered.

Courteously he asked Kathlyn how she had become injured, and Ramabai acted as interpreter. He then ushered them into his house, spread rugs and cushions for them to sit upon, and mildly inquired what had brought the son of his old friend so far.

Colonel Hare spoke several dialects fluently, and briefly told (between sips of tea and bites of cake which had been set out for the guests) his experiences in Allahabad.

"The rulers of Allahabad," observed Bala Khan, "have always been half mad."

"By the way, colonel, is there a pair of binoculars in the howdah?"

Umballa in Pursuit.

Ramabai nodded in agreement.

"You should never have gone back," went on Bala Khan, lighting a cigarette and eyeing Kathlyn with wonder and interest. "Ah, that Durga Ram whom they call Umballa! I have heard of him, but fortunately for him our paths have not crossed in any way."

He blew a cloud of smoke above his head. "Well, he has shown wisdom in avoiding me. In front of me, a desert; behind me, verdant hills and many sheep and cattle, well guarded. I am too far away for them to bother. Sometimes the desert thieves cause a flurry, but that is nothing. It keeps the tulwar from growing rusty," patting the great knife at his side.

Bala Khan was muscular; his lean hands denoted work; his clear eyes, the sun and wind. He was in height and build something after the pattern of the colonel.

"And to force a crown on me!" said the colonel.

"You could have given it to this Umballa," wisely.

"That I would not do."

"In each case you showed forethought. The Durga Ram, when he had you where he wanted you—" Bala Khan drew a finger suggestively across his throat.

Lowly and quickly Pandita translated for Kathlyn so that she might miss none of the conversation.

"The Colonel Sahib looks worn."

"I am."

"Now, in my travels I have been to Bombay, and there I dressed like you white people. I have the complete dress. Perhaps the Colonel Sahib would be pleased to see if he can wear it? And also the use of my barber?"

"Bala Khan," cried the colonel, "you are a prince indeed! It will tonic me like medicine. Thanks, thanks!"

"It is well."

"You have a wonderful elephant out there in the compound," said Bruce, who had remained a silent listener to all that had gone before.

"Ah! That is a curiosity. He is worshipped by Hindus and revered by my own people. I am his official custodian. There is a saying among the people that ill will befall me should I lose, sell or permit him to be stolen."

"And many have offered to buy?" inquired the colonel.

"Many."

When the colonel appeared at supper, simple but substantial, he was a new man. He stood up straight, though his back still smarted from the lash. Kathlyn was delighted at the change.

After the meal was over and coffee was drunk, the khan conducted his guests to his armory, of which he was very proud. Guns of all descriptions lined the walls. Some of them Bruce would have liked to own, to decorate the walls of his own armory, thousands of miles away.

The colonel whispered a forgotten prayer as, later, he laid down his weary aching limbs upon the rope bed. Almost immediately he sank into slumber as deep and silent as the sea.

Kathlyn and Bruce, however, went up to the hanging gardens and remained there till nine, marveling over the beauty of the night. The Pathan city lay under their gaze, with a likeness to one of those magic cities of Sinbad the Sailor. But they spoke no word of love. When alone with this remarkable young woman, Bruce found himself invariably tongue-tied.

At the same hour, less than fifty miles away, Umballa stood before the opening of his elaborate tent, erected at sundown by the river's brink, and scowled at the moon. He saw no beauty in the translucent sky, in the silvery paleness of the world below. He wanted revenge, and the word hissed in his brain as a viper hisses in the dark of its cave.

Dung fires twinkled and soldiers lounged about them, smoking and gossiping. They had been given an earnest against their long delinquent wages, and they were in a happy frame of mind. Their dead comrades were dead and mourning was for widows; for them would be the pleasures of swift reprisals. The fugitives had gone toward the desert, and in that bleak stretch of treeless land it would not be difficult to find them, once they started in pursuit.

Midnight.

In the compound the moonlight lay upon everything; upon the fat sides and back of the sacred white elephant, upon the three low caste keepers, now free of the vigilant eye of their Brahmin chief. The gates were barred and closed; all inside the house of Bala Khan were asleep. Far away a sentry dozed on his rifle, on the wall. The three keepers whispered and chuckled among themselves.

"Who will know?" said one.

"The moon will not speak," said another.

"Then let us go and smoke."

The three approached the elephant. A bit of gymnastics and one of them was boosted to the back of the elephant, to whom this episode was more or less familiar. Another followed; the third was pulled up, and from the elephant's back they made the top of the wall and disappeared down into the street. Here they paused cautiously, for two guards always patrolled the front of the compound during the night. Presently the three trunks stole away toward the bazaar, which in this desert town occupied but a single street. Down they went into a cellar way and the guru's curse stalked beside them. For opium is the hand-maiden of all curses.

Perhaps twenty minutes later slight sounds came from the front of the compound wall. A rifle barrel clattered upon the cobbles. Then, over the wall, near the elephant, a head appeared, then a body. This was repeated four times, and four light-footed nomads of the desert lowered themselves into the compound. They ran quickly to the gate and noiselessly unbarred it. Outside were five more desert nomads, gathered about the insensible bodies of the sentries.

These nine men were the dancers who had entered the town in advance of Kathlyn. For weeks they had lain in wait for this moment. They had spied upon the three low caste keepers and upon learning of their nocturnal junkets into the opium den had cast the die this night.

With the utmost caution they approached the sacred elephant, took off his chains and led him from the compound. Immediately six of the marauders trotted far ahead toward the gate they knew to be the least guarded. The sacred elephant, passing through the streets, attended by three men, aroused no suspicions in any stranger who saw. So remote was the wall, so seemingly inaccessible, and so little interfered with that it was only human that its guardians should eventually grow careless.

When the keepers, staggering under the fumes of the drug, returned near daylight, first to find the gate open, second to find their sacred charge gone, they fled in terror; for it would be death, lingering and painful, for them to stay and explain how and why they had left their post.

The wild and lawless brigands knew exactly what they were about. There were several agents of European and American consulates at this white elephant; and as it could not be purchased there was no reason why it could not be stolen, and it was.

When the brigands arrived at sunrise to find his vocation gone he set up a wailing which awakened the household. The khan was furious and ordered a general search. He vowed death to the four hands which had done this sacrilege!

Kathlyn and the others were genuinely sorry when the khan announced what had taken place.

Said he: "Come, you are all skilled hunters. Find me my elephant and these guns and newer and surer ones shall protect you from Durga Ram, should he take it into his head to come this way."

The colonel, Bruce and Ramabai set out at once. After they had gone a camel rider entered the compound and sought an audience with Bala Khan. Kathlyn and Pandita were in the compound at the time and the former was greatly interested in the saddle bags attached to one of which was a binocular case. Kathlyn could not resist the inclination to open this case. It contained an exceptionally fine pair of glasses, such as were used in that day in the British army. No doubt they were a part of some loot.

Suddenly an idea came to her. She asked permission (through Pandita) to ride the camel outside the town. After some argument the servant in charge consented.

Upon a knoll outside the city—a hillock of sand three or four hundred feet in height—Kathlyn tried the glasses. From this promontory she had range of something like fifteen to twenty miles. Back and forth her gaze roved and suddenly paused.

Since She Went to Heaven.

Reminds me of Sarah Jane Skewer, back on Half Moon, who went to a traveling clairvoyant. The medium summoned Jane's mother from Spirit Land, and Jane asked the old lady some trick questions. The ghost gave the wrong answers, of course. Whereupon Sarah Jane exclaimed: "O, maw, since you went to Heaven you've learned to be an awful liar!"

How to Correct the Mistake.

If you misdirect a letter and think of your error just after you have dropped the letter into a box, don't waste time waiting for the postman and asking him for it to let you correct your mistake. He won't do it; the law does not permit him. You must call at the station to which the letter is going and explain the matter to the clerk in charge. He will redirect the letter for you if you give him the correct address in writing.

BIANCA MICELE

By ESTHER VANDEVEER

An officer of the carabinieri—the government police of Italy—entered a prison in Naples, was admitted to a corridor and stopped at a cell where he could see a girl through the bars. He stood looking at her with a curious expression on his face, the expression of one who would gaze upon a beautiful leopard in a cage. She was a peasant, but endowed with a beauty that a highborn dame might envy. She returned his gaze as one would look upon a captor—with hate, mingled with the knowledge that she was powerless to gratify it.

"Well," he said, "you see what crime has brought you to. You are a woman, and the government dislikes to inflict on you the punishment of a man. I have told the public prosecutor that if he will spare you, let you go free, you will return to the mountains and lead an orderly life; that you will disband your troop and advise them to live honestly hereafter."

As he proceeded the girl's expression changed to one that he did not understand, for he was infatuated with her. He had been sent to capture a troop of bandits who were pouncing on persons, whom they held for ransom, and had found a girl in command. He had succeeded in trapping her and a few of her band and brought them to Rome.

"I will not trouble the police again and will advise my men not to do so. It is not the prosecutor that pardons me of my own accord. You have saved my life," she said.

"The only recompense I wish is to see you a good girl."

Lieutenant Morini the next day came again to the jail with a pardon for Bianca Micele, took her out of prison and proceeded with her by rail to Castellammare, thence upon the steep heights behind it till he reached the summit. On reaching a certain point she gave a "too-hoo" and a couple of men sprang from behind rocks and advanced to ward her and her conductor.

"Take this man," she said, "into the ravine and give him the stiletto."

The two men drew back. Morini was in uniform, and they hesitated at murdering one of the carabinieri simply to gratify their leader, well knowing that for doing so they would be hanged to the death.

"Signorina," said one of them, "why do you wish to put him out of the way?"

"Well, since you don't wish it, send him down again. But you are wrong. He will return with a force strong enough to take us, and our lives will pay for such folly."

The two bandits consulted in an undertone. Then the one who had spoken said:

"We will obey you if you command us to do this, but we do not advise it."

"Send him away," said Bianca. Morini, who had expected death, lost no time in descending the heights. But no sooner had he reached a safe distance than he proved the truth of the girl's words by resolving that he would never rest till he had got her again in his power and punished her for her treachery and more especially for her ingratitude. This she divined when she consented that he should go free.

The police soon heard of more depredations on the part of the band whom Bianca was to advise to change their occupation, and it was reported that she was still at their head. Morini was laughed at by his companions and was impatient to get revenge on the woman who had not only spurned but ridiculed him. He went himself in disguise to reconnoiter the position occupied by the band, then took a sufficient number of carabinieri to surround their camp. But he failed to surprise them and was obliged to fight in order to get them into his possession.

Morini was with a party of his men who attacked a rude fort the bandits had thrown up across the mouth of a pocket. Failing to pick off his enemies in sufficient numbers, he determined to carry the work by assault. As he stood on it, about to leap down into it, a man put the muzzle of his gun to the lieutenant's breast. But the ball went over his shoulder, for Bianca, who was there, knocked the gun up with her own piece.

That was the end of the matter, every person belonging to the band being captured, with their girl leader, and all being taken to Naples.

"Well, lieutenant," said his command, "so you have captured that little devil. I presume that now you are satisfied to let justice take its course."

"As to that I am in a worse fix than before."

"Why?"

"Had it not been for the little devil I would not now be here. One of her men fired at me with the muzzle of his gun close against my breast. She knocked his gun up and the bullet, instead of going into my heart, grazed my ear."

The officer laughed, but secretly he was pleased. He had no stomach for shooting a woman, and this afforded him an excuse. The band were kept for months without any definite action of the government; then they were released on condition that they leave Italy.

As to Bianca, she is now Signora Morini.

But stranger things than that have happened in love.

Training Outweighs Long Service

There is no better proof of this than the every-day scenes of long service, untrained employees at the back and call of younger men who occupy the big positions because of their training. It's a case of Training vs. Long Service—with the odds in favor of the trained man.

OPPOSING ARMIES COME IN CONTACT

French and German Lines Confronting Along Border.

AUSTRIANS ARE COMING UP

Troops of Republic Victorious in Every Engagement With Foes, Paris War Office Announces.

Paris, Aug. 13.—The French war office issued an official announcement declaring that the troops of the republic have been victorious in every engagement with the Germans.

This statement relates to the fighting in Alsace and along the frontier where the opposing forces are spread out in a battle nearly 100 miles long.

It was further officially declared that all the German soldiers who penetrated France in the departments of Meuse and Moselle-Moselle have been driven back across the border.

It is expected that the French army that invaded Alsace and which reported capturing Altkirch and Muelhausen will soon be engaged in battles with Austrian soldiers. Definite information reached the war office that the Fourteenth Austrian army corps, consisting of 20,000 men, under command of the Grand Duke of Tuscany, had entered Alsace from the direction of the Swiss frontier and was moving steadily to a juncture with German forces.

The French are in contact with German forces all along the frontier. The patches from the front say that there is a heavy body of German soldiers maneuvering over a line stretching the distance of five miles between Chambley and Messimy, with the possible intention of trying to outflank the French.

At Mangiennes, northeast of Verdun, a sharp engagement took place in which the French claim to have repulsed the German with heavy losses. Six guns, three heavy pieces of artillery and three rapid fire guns, fell into the hands of the soldiers of the republic, according to the report. A battery of German artillery was disabled.

German troops attacked the French advance posts in the vicinity of Chateau Salins, eighteen miles northeast of Nancy, but suffered severe losses and had to retire, according to the war office's official statement. It adds that in the fighting at Mangiennes the French artillery wrought great havoc among the German cavalry which was sent forward to lead the attack. The French column was strongly supported by artillery.

Hand to hand fighting around the German guns ensued. In the face of a deadly and incessant fire from the German machine guns the French soldiers swept forward, sabering and bayonetting the gunners. Although the Germans fought gallantly the could not withstand the charge, the report declares, and the guns were taken along with a quantity of ammunition.

Other dispatches to the French military authorities announce the capture of Lagarde, on the Marne canal, just over the line in Lorraine. A bayonet charge by the French drove out the German defenders, who fell back through the mountainous district east of the village.

The war office announced that the French army which is invading Alsace has fallen back before superior forces to the plains south of Muelhausen. It is reported that a battle between the Germans advancing from Brelbach and the French army of invasion is now in progress at that point.

REPORT BIG FIGHT IN SERBIA

Austrians in Battle at Visegrad With Servians and Montenegrins.

Nish, Serbia, Aug. 13.—The Serbian war office announces that a heavy battle is going on at Visegrad between Servians and Montenegrins on one side and Austrians on the other. The latter are strongly entrenched.

The Servian and Montenegrin armies, which had affected a junction on the border of Herzegovina, are now operating together.

Servian artillery is engaged in the bombardment of Gorashda on the river Drina, twenty-nine miles southeast of Sarajevo, the Bosnian capital. Servian troops already had captured the Bosnian town of Vardishta, at the junction of the rivers Drina and Lim.

Some unimportant outpost encounters are reported on the Servian frontier at different points on the rivers Save and Danube. The bombardment of Belgrade, the Servian capital, by the Austrian artillery continued, and heavy material damage was inflicted on the city.

Reports reaching Nish from Sofia state that the Bulgarian government is preparing for eventualities, but it is not known what it has in view.

SERVIAN ROYAL HEIR HURT

Crown Prince George Hit by Fragment of Shell Watching Bombardment.

London, Aug. 13.—A Central News dispatch from Nish, Serbia, says that Crown Prince George, of Serbia, was wounded while watching the Austrian bombardment of Belgrade.

The prince was standing on the walls of the fortress when a fragment of shell struck him on the head and made him unconscious. The wound is said not to be dangerous.

A news agency dispatch from Paris says that it is rumored there that three sons of the Duke and Duchess of Mecklenburg, members of the French nobility, had been killed by Germans in the duchy of Baden.

NAVAL BATTLE WAGED OFF NEW ENGLAND

Isle of Shoals Reports Vigorous Engagement.

Portsmouth, N. H., Aug. 13.—A telephone message received here from the Isle of Shoals said that a naval battle between a British and a German warship could be seen from the roof of a hotel there.

The firing apparently came from a distance of fifteen miles. Several guns seemed to be discharged simultaneously at short intervals. After fifteen minutes the firing ceased.

An hour later the firing was resumed, apparently from the same point as before. It lasted five minutes. The watch in the observatory of the United States life saving station on Apple Island reported that he could see no vessel.

WOULD PRESERVE FINE LIBRARY

Paper Urges that Colonel Nicholson's Valuable Collection of Books be Kept Intact. More than Fifteen Thousand Books.

The Philadelphia Inquirer bemoaning the fate of so many of the city's valuable historical collections, insofar as they are lost to the city by being sold to persons of other places, expresses the hope that Colonel Nicholson's great Civil War library may not be taken. It says:

What is to be the ultimate fate of this Civil War library of Colonel Nicholson, the most complete, unique and valuable in the country? The same question might be asked of the great art collections now in the hands of individual Philadelphians. Of Mr. Johnson's pictures the New York Nation lately said that it was the most valuable collection, public or private, in the United States.

In Colonel Nicholson's library are more than 15,000 titles, bound in cloth, morocco and leather, in the finest manner of the bookbinders' art. Nearly every important volume has been extended by the insertion of rare plates, maps and autograph letters. Volume after volume contains letters in the handwriting of Grant, Meade, Sherman, Thomas, McClellan, McDowell, Pope, Hancock, Lee, Stonewall Jackson, Leonidas Polk, Pemberton, Sheridan, Humphreys, Gibbon, Ord and other military leaders, Northern and Southern.

Here are Pemberton's MS. accounts of the surrender of Vicksburg; the maps used by Meade at Gettysburg and Appomattox; the MS. in French of one of the volumes of the Comte de Paris' History of the Civil War; a bill for constructing a military telegraph in the Shenandoah Valley approved by "Stonewall" Jackson; a report of General John B. Gordon, not in the war records; an order of march in "Phil" Kearney's handwriting and signed by him; a set of reports indorsed. Copy made under my supervision by Colonel John P. Nicholson, and signed by general Joseph E. Johnston; an autograph letter of General Lee, dated March 14, 1865. There are Confederate and Northern war-time almanacs, Vicksburg, Charleston, Richmond, Macon, Savannah war-time imprints, Jefferson Davis' inaugural address and messages with Richmond imprint; General Buell's MS. notes on Shiloh; Early's MS. notes on his narrative.

The wealth of manuscripts may be indicated by reference to a few volumes. Grant's Memoirs contains an inserted letter from Grant to Pemberton dated Vicksburg, March 2, 1863, 82 plates, 8 maps, and many clippings; Pennypacker's Life of General Meade (Great Commanders, Series) has been extended to two volumes with 177 illustrations, 16 maps and autograph letters inserted. Sheridan's Memoirs is the copy presented by General Sheridan to Colonel Nicholson. Extended to four volumes it contains 58 inserted autograph letters and 123 extra illustrations. Swinton's "The Twelve Decisive Battles of the War" has inserted nine autograph letters of army commanders in the battles—Grant, Meade, Sherman, Thomas, McClellan, McDowell, Rosecrans, Sheridan and Captain Worden, of the Monitor. Sherman's Memoirs is extended to 8 volumes and illustrated with 58 autograph letters and autographs.

So vast and valuable a collection should ultimately be housed in a War Museum Building on the parkway. Already a fund of some dimensions, made by the Loyal Legion, the collections of that military order and many relics owned by Grand Army Posts, are ready to be contributed. When the time comes will Philadelphia's wealth, community and individual, be equal to the preservation of Colonel Nicholson's collection, or will that follow the fate of other noted collections?

A World In Arms!

On high midsummer's sun looks down and warms World harvests to their ripeness with its heat; The tasseled corn, the fields of golden wheat, The orchard's bending boughs and fruitful farms In smiling plenty fair repose; the charms Of peace were never fairer or more sweet! But listen! On world stillness comes the beat Of drums, and lo! behold a world in arms!

From plains on which embattled Europe stood A century ago and watched the star Of great Napoleon wane and set in blood, Again there comes the shock of world-wide war. A war of nations now again is on, And night descends as earth still hoped for dawn.

Oh, Europe! Long like Cadmus you have sown The dragon's teeth that now as armed men Spring up and, like the dragon from his den, They rend and tear! Earth shudders and the moan Of stricken ones is heard, and not alone From battlefields there comes the cry Of pain, Where Death his harvest reaps as sickled grain, But from a million homes in war's red zone!

Oh, kaisers twain, twain kings and thou, dread czar, Who mobilize your fleets and armies vast And send them forth to work your will in war, And blend the nations in one holocaust! Not all your pomp and prayers can now atone The ruin you have wrought till Time be frown.

GRAND DUCHESS BRAVES THE KAISER'S INVADERS.

Youthful Ruler of Luxemburg Rebuffed as She Seeks to Block Path of Troops.

A heroic role played by the youthful Grand Duchess Marie Adelaide, ruler of Luxemburg, in striving to prevent German violation of her country's neutrality is revealed in Brussels in private dispatches from Luxemburg, which escaped the German censors.

As soon as the duchess received word that the Germans were on the point of invading Luxemburg she sprang into an automobile, accompanied by a single lady in waiting and, despite entreaties of her ministers, sped to Adolf bridge, over which the Germans must cross.

There she found one cabinet minister, Baron Eyschen, parleying with the German major in command of the advance guard. Baron Eyschen had turned his car lengthwise across the bridge, and the duchess promptly ordered her chauffeur to do the same.

Then she alighted and joined Baron Eyschen, who was showing the German officer a copy of the Berlin treaty. The officer waived the treaty aside, saying: "I have my orders."

The duchess said: "The neutrality of my country must be respected. You must wait until I telegraph the Kaiser." The German officer turned his back on her, exclaiming: "You had better go home quietly."

"The duchess burst into tears, but a moment later, when the commander of her little army, Major Van Dyck, remonstrated with the German officer, she recovered herself, even though forced to see the German leave his revolver at Van Dyck, commanding him to clear out quickly.

"They are a superior force. We can do nothing," she said quietly to Van Dyck, and with calm dignity reentered her automobile and returned to the palace.

Ideal Feminine Form.

The Medicean Venus is five feet five inches in height, and this is held by many sculptors and artists to be the most admirable feminine stature. For a woman of five feet five inches 138 pounds is the proper weight, and if she be well formed she can stand another ten pounds without greatly showing it.

Shopping in Brazil.

In Brazil it is considered undignified for a lady to go shopping. Usually a servant is sent for samples, and if it is a hat the servant wants to buy a box or basket containing several of the latest styles is sent for her inspection.

ONE-TIME FRIENDS.

Remember that the friendship which you now think poor and vain will endure in hope and patience till you ask for it again.

"Take heed of a speedy, professing friend; friendship is never lasting which flames before it burns," says a poet. Another warns: "Nothing is more dangerous than an imprudent friend; an open foe may prove a curse, but a pretended friend is worse." By all of this wisdom we should gather that the choosing of a true friend is to most women almost as serious a matter as choosing a lover. Are not both supposed to be cherished a lifetime?

There are women, remarkably sagacious and clever in all else, who make a most unwise selection of women friends. The sedate woman fairly adores the bright creature, all life and sparkle. The butterfly creature, who sees only the bright side of every situation and upon whose lips there is ever ready laughter, seeks the companionship of the quiet, pensive girl, whose wise counsel saves her from many a girlish blunder. Women like friends who are congenial to them. The woman who imagines that she has domestic trouble turns to the woman who sympathizes with her.

Another wife who is slaving and working from morning till night to keep down family expenses finds comfort with the friend who praises her for her self sacrifices. She assures her that her husband ought to be more appreciative of what she is doing for his sake; that it is a wife's duty to be frugal and help her husband accumulate. The hardworking wife listens to this fulsome praise with sincere content; quite forgetful that she who is so lavish in dealing it out is the most extravagant of womankind.

Her lavish expenditures have placed her husband on the verge of bankruptcy. A woman friend of opposite nature, different ideas, is ballast for her, either for weal or woe; weal, if she helps her to be strong and brave, woe, if she ingratiates herself into her confidence and ends by betraying it or gaining such an influence over her that she can bend her to her will against her better judgment and to the detriment of her family and loved ones. From childhood up, a woman's friendship should be safeguarded most carefully. She should be removed from influences that are likely to prove dangerous. There is no end of trouble a woman friend may brew in a household if she is inclined to be a mischief maker.

PURITY OF THE AIR.

An English Scientist Attacks Our Theories of Ventilation.

Whether the English scientist attacks one of the most cherished of our hygienic notions with a logic that commands respectful attention. His contention is that efficient ventilation does not depend upon the chemical purity of the air. The attempt should be to secure motion, coolness and dryness rather than to displace one body of air by another.

He denies that there is a toxic organic substance in the atmosphere as the result of human exhalations and challenges those who disagree with him to their proofs, as the existence of such poisons has never been scientifically demonstrated.

The lungs, according to him, are never filled with air some of which has not been exhaled. Inhalation follows so closely upon exhalation in normal breathing that a portion of the air that has just left the lungs is invariably drawn back into them.

Exhaustive experiments show that the amount of air thus returned is from 1 to 2 per cent in persons remaining quietly indoors. It is from 4 to 10 per cent in those asleep in bed. There are certain sections of the respiratory apparatus, moreover, the nose and the larger bronchi, in which exhaled air always lingers. It thus appears that the air in the lungs is always heavily contaminated with their own excreting gases, even in outdoor life, and the dead spaces make it certain that this contamination will not decrease.

It is not worth while, so the doctor argues, to pay much attention to the small amount of carbon dioxide in the atmosphere, therefore, and if the air is kept in motion and not permitted to become too moist or warm the necessary ends of ventilation will be subserved.

Great 3 Day Handkerchief Sale AUGUST 13, 14, 15

WE are able to give our customers an opportunity for buying Handkerchiefs much under price—under the following circumstances:—John Pullman & Co. of New York and Belfast, Manufacturers and Importers of Handkerchiefs exclusively, and from whom we bought the bulk of our better Handkerchiefs for years—for some reason are going out of the business—and a letter, accompanying samples from them, representing hundreds of styles of Handkerchiefs, says: "In disposing of the merchandise we determined to do so as far as practical to our old and regular customers so that they might derive any advantage there might be from the low prices we might quote."

The prices named on samples of exactly the same character and quality of Handkerchiefs we have always carried, induced us to place an order of six numbers, aggregating about 500 dozen, which we place on sale at our usual short advance on the lower prices paid rather than carry them to sell at Christmas. Read the savings below. Buy now for Christmas giving and save the difference.

VIVID STORY OF LIEGE ATTACK

Eyewitness Tells of Wonderful Courage Shown by Belgian Men and Women.

The New York Tribune publishes a vivid interview with Benjamin Hallet, the first man to get back to London after witnessing the first attacks of the Germans on Liege. He said:

"A grim determination not to surrender Liege to the Germans until its last defender has been killed inspired every citizen I spoke to. Women and children, weeping, were hurried away in every possible kind of vehicle, and many on foot. The men and many women, too, were taking up positions to which they were sent by those who were in charge.

"From almost anywhere in the city, because Liege is on a hill, German troops could be seen. As the first line came into view the guns of the German artillery started booming.

"The first rank of the German soldiers crossing the pontoon bridge were about twenty feet from the Belgian side, swinging with the bridge, and had just broken into a run, when the Liege guns let go. When the roar stopped the surface of the water was writhing with German soldiers, struggling to free themselves from the dead and the shattered pontoon.

"The other German soldiers appeared to take no more notice of what had happened than if it had been part of the arranged program. More wagons galloped up, and another pontoon bridge was thrown across the Meuse. Before it was completed at least a hun-
